Shaping the Future of Cancer Research

Fox Chase scientists are using cutting-edge tools to advance cancer care

Fox Chase Cancer Center has a long history of groundbreaking research into the prevention, detection, and treatment of cancer, work that continues in 2022. Scientists at Fox Chase are harnessing a variety of cutting-edge tools and techniques—artificial intelligence, epigenetics, and nanoengineering, to name a few—to continue to unravel the inner workings of cancer.

This research is being facilitated by a renewed focus on interdisciplinary work involving faculty at Fox Chase and the Lewis Katz School of Medicine at Temple University. Fox Chase is part of the Temple University Health System. That synergy was underscored last year when Erica Golemis, Deputy Chief Science Officer at Fox Chase, was named chair of the newly created Department of Cancer & Cellular Biology at the Katz School of Medicine.
